

TYALIË NASSEA

HIGH ELF DRUID 1 • SAGE BACKGROUND
Tuesday Game Character

EXPANDED BACKSTORY (PLAYER-APPROVED & REVISED VERSION)

Tyalië Nassea is a high elf (Sun elf) and rather young as far as elves go — only fifty-ish winters have passed since she first opened her eyes beneath the golden boughs of Evereska. Born into the respected Nassea family, a long line of arcane scholars and mages who had served the court of Evereska for centuries, she was gently but firmly guided from childhood toward the path of wizardry. Her parents and grandparents, accomplished arcanists all, enrolled her in rigorous studies and spoke often of the family's proud tradition. "Magic is our legacy," they would remind her, arranging apprenticeships and expecting her eventual enrollment in one of the great wizardly towers. For years Tyalië followed their wishes, mastering several wizard cantrips and spells through dedicated study as a sage.

Yet something always felt missing. The rigid formulas and tower-bound learning never truly sang to her spirit. As she grew, Tyalië began quietly drifting away from her family's expectations. During travels and visits to kin in Deepingdale, she sought out elven druids and rangers on the outskirts of civilization — those who still walked the old ways. She found herself drawn to the primal rhythms of nature, the living magic of the forest, and the ancient songs of the wild. Her formative learning as a sage now blended with a firm grounding in Druidic craft.

She has been waiting for the right moment to break from the expected path — to openly declare her calling as a druid rather than continue the family tradition of wizardry.

That moment arrived unexpectedly in Shadowdale. Tyalië was returning to Evereska from visiting relatives in Deepingdale, traveling with her much older brother, a traditional and accomplished wizard who had long wished to see the legendary Elminster's Tower. He insisted they stop at the famous Old Skull Inn to rest before continuing upriver. It was there, by pure chance, that they overheard Jerana Fisher's impassioned plea for brave souls to guard a caravan north to rebuild the ruined logging town of Snowmantle. Something in Jerana's words stirred deep within Tyalië — a feeling that this journey into the Dalelands might be the turning point she had been waiting for, the "right moment" at last.

FAMILY HEIRLOOM: THE MOONPETAL CIRCLET

Tyalië wears upon her brow a delicate family heirloom: a slender circlet of interwoven silver vines and living emerald leaves, with a small moonstone set at the center that catches even the faintest starlight. Known in her family as the Moonpetal Circlet, it was passed down from her grandmother, a Sun Elf who secretly studied the primal traditions and once walked the ancient groves near the lost city of Myth Drannor before the Retreat.

“The Moonpetal remembers the song of the old woods. When its bearer walks the true path beneath the moon, the circlet shall bloom and the ancient magic awaken.”

Tyalië has always worn it as a simple keepsake and reminder of her grandmother’s gentle spirit. She does not yet realize that the circlet contains dormant magic far older and greater than any spell she has mastered — a fragment of ancient elven nature-binding tied directly to the soil and mythals of the Dalelands itself.
